

Missourians On Watch Towers Of The Orient

On the campus in front of Jay H. Neff Hall at the University of Missouri there is a sun dial which bears this inscription: "I have seen thee a watchman." The men above, representing Missouri's journalistic family in Shanghai, learned the fundamentals of their profession under the esteemed Dean Walter Williams, founder of the first school of journalism in the world, and now president of the University of Missouri. Presentation of the pair of stone lions by the National Government of China to Missouri's renowned school is a tribute to Dean Williams' ability in sending out watchmen. The journalists above are: top row, left to right, Mr. Y. P. Wong, assistant general manager of Shun Pao and editor of the China Times; Mr. Victor Keene, correspondent of the New York Herald-Tribune; Mr. P. Y. Chien, secretary to the executive office of Shun Pao. Center, Mr. A'lan Carney, assistant news editor of the China Press; Mr. M. J. Harris, correspondent for the Associated Press; Mr. Sutton Christian, city editor of the China Press. Bottom, Mr. J. B. Powell, editor of the China Weekly Review; Mr. Thomas F. Millard, veteran journalist of the Orient and now adviser to the National Government at Nanking; Mr. Carl Crow, president of Carl Crow, Inc., advertising agency.
